

I am a resident of Indiana and since Indiana enacted its Telephone Privacy Law I have had many uninterrupted evenings at home. Prior to the enactment of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Act and my number being placed on the list to "not call," on any given occasion, I could receive several telemarketer calls at home which significantly impacted my personal time. I request that the FCC consider the elements of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Act and not put forward any proposed legislation that affords any less protection to the citizens of Indiana or any other state for that matter. Simply put, if I want to purchase something or receive any information on an offering, I will proactively solicit the respective offerer for such information. I do not want to be blindly called by telemarketers on anything. Your attention to my comments is greatly appreciated.
